

Unique Posters!

In our main store room we show this week a unique and artistic collection of posters cut from papers of different colors by Par-dise, Farnish, & Purdie University, are a great novelty.

The exhibit of Meakin pictures will continue this week.

THE H. LIEBER CO.

24 West Washington Street.

Manufacturers of Grilles and Fret Work.

Monday Bargains

The Time To Buy Portieres

Monday 32 pairs fine Portieres, regular $9.00, $10.00 and $12.00 goods, all to go Monday at.....

$2.69

This is a lot of Portieres that we cleaned up of the importer at less than one-half the regular price, and we are going to give our customers the advantage of it.

Albert Gall

Carpets, Draperies, Wall Paper, 17 and 19 West Washington Street. Hardwood Floors laid, finished and refinished.

The Diamond Merchant at Business.

About Diamonds

The satisfactory selection of Diamonds necessitates absolute certainty as to their quality. No more complete protection could be given purchasers than is offered by our strong guarantee regarding the value and purity of our gems.

J. C. SIPE, Importer of DIAMONDS

Room 4, 184 North Meridian Street.

"SOROSIS"

The New Shoe for Women.

See the 1899 TAN SHOES

Leading styles of New York and Boston.

C. FRIEDGEN

21 North Pennsylvania St.

SOLE AGENT.

HOSIERY

New Spring Hose, cotton, 10c, 25c to 50c. Lisle drop-stitch, plain black, 3 pairs for $1.00; extra value. Full line fancy Lisle.

Tucker's STORE

10 EAST WASHINGTON STREET.

The Cafe

The New Hotel English Cafe Conducted in a manner to attract the best class of patronage.

PRICES MODERATE

Open from 6 a. m. to 12 p. m.

Interstate Hotel Co., Proprietors.

THE CHRISTIAN ALLIANCE.

Its Annual Convention in This City This Week.

The annual convention of the Christian and Missionary Alliance will be held in this city Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week at the Second Presbyterian Church.

There will be a number of distinguished representatives of the alliance present, chief among whom will be Rev. Milton M. Bales, of Chicago, and Rev. D. W. Le Lachuer, superintendent of the mission work in China and Japan, who opened the first Christian mission school in Tibet.

Rev. George N. Edwards, superintendent of the alliance for Indiana, Michigan, West Kentucky and Missouri, will preside, and the Ohio Male Quartet, composed of Rev. D. W. Mayland, Rev. D. W. Kerr, Mr. Boyer and Mr. Kern, all from Ohio, will furnish the music.

The alliance is a union of Christians of all evangelical denominations, and its aim is to promote a deeper spiritual life in all its members and among all Christians. It has branches in all parts of the United States and Canada and in many places in Europe. The first service of the convention will begin Tuesday evening at 7:30 o'clock.

THE NEWS LITIGATION.

A Decision of the Higher Court Expected This Week.

Ferdinand Winter, attorney for Charles R. Williams and Delavan Smith, the defendants in the Indianapolis News litigation, will file tomorrow morning his brief in the matter of plaintiff W. J. Richards's petition to the Supreme Court to dismiss the defendants' appeal. The court has asked for this brief several times, and it was expected that it would be filed last evening, but it was not finished in time. It was said yesterday that a decision was looked for this week.

If the court dismisses the appeal the case will go back to Judge McMaster, of the Superior Court, and it will be the duty of the sale of the paper. The sale will be preceded by eight weeks of advertising. John R. McLean, the millionaire owner of the Cincinnati Enquirer, sent a representative to this city not long ago to examine the News plant, and it was not a surprise if McLean bids for the paper. It is said there are several out-of-town syndicates with eyes on the prospective sale. Major Richards, the plaintiff in the suit, will be a bidder, and it is presumed the defendants will also try to buy the paper.

Seaton the Butcher.

Dunlap's ladies' saliors.

CHANGE AT THE ARSENAL

MAJ. A. L. VARNER ORDERED TO A STATION AT SAN ANTONIO.

Major Charles Shaler, of Washington, to Succeed Him—Chance for Enlarged Scope.

Major A. L. Varney, who, for the last seven years has been in command of the United States arsenal in this city, has been ordered to the command of the arsenal at San Antonio, Tex. The orders were issued yesterday afternoon, and it is expected they will become effective at once. Major Varney will be succeeded by Major Charles Shaler, who is now on duty in the ordnance bureau at Washington.

The news of Major Varney's change will cause regret in this city, where he and his family have lived for an unusually long time for an army officer. His sons have married here, and Major and Mrs. Varney have identified themselves with Indianapolis interests and the people here more than is ordinarily done by officers who can hope to remain at one post but a short time.

The recent death of General Flieger, who was in command of the ordnance department, has caused a general change to be made. Major Varney, who is now fourth in line of rank of majors of his department, first came here seven years ago last February. Previous to this assignment of command he was in command of the arsenal at Watertown for two years. While the post here is not one of the large posts, yet it is regarded as one of the most desirable in the United States, and its importance has been greatly increased since Major Varney assumed command. He has been extraordinarily successful in securing appropriations for the improvement of the post and the property, and since he has been here the system of sewerage has been put in, floors have been placed in the old buildings, the iron fence on the Michigan-street side has been put up and he has secured the electric lighting plant, with dynamos and other accessories. Probably the most important work he has done has been the erection and equipment of a shop for the manufacture of haversacks, knapsacks and leather goods. This was secured at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and since that time the arsenal has been busy with the manufacture of these articles were made and shipped to the front from here. Major Varney's new command at San Antonio is not so large a post as this one, and there are no more of the same kind here. Here there are twenty-five men.

Major Shaler is ranked seventh of the majors of the ordnance department, and first entered the army in 1861 as a sergeant of the Twelfth Pennsylvania, but gave up that position in 1862 to enter the military academy at West Point. He graduated from there in 1865, and was assigned to the Second Artillery, where he remained until 1867, when he was transferred to the ordnance department. He took Major Shaler to Washington with him, and he has been there since. Major Shaler was transferred to the ordnance department July 5, 1867, and became a first lieutenant June 1, 1868. He was promoted to captain in 1870, and to major in May, 1897. He has been married since he was assigned to Washington, while he has never been assigned to this post, yet he has visited here and has many friends in the city.

GEN. BUFFINGTON'S CHANGES.

Gossip as to Men with Whom He Has Had Clashes.

The changes now taking place in the ordnance department as the result of Gen. Buffington succeeding to the command have caused much comment in army circles.

The ex-officer says that now that he has the power several of those with whom Gen. Buffington may have had differences are drawing the line, and the undesirable ones he further said he had followed all changes and could trace several assignments to a personal cause.

The proposed change was the subject of conversation among a number of military officers of this city last night, and it was believed that it would be possible to make this arsenal one of the most important in the country. Major Varney is a well-known figure to bring it up than any commanding officer ever here and there is now a thoroughly equipped shop at the arsenal with all necessary tools, for the manufacture of haversacks, knapsacks and leather goods. This was secured at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and since that time the arsenal has been busy with the manufacture of these articles were made and shipped to the front from here. Major Varney's new command at San Antonio is not so large a post as this one, and there are no more of the same kind here. Here there are twenty-five men.

Major Shaler is ranked seventh of the majors of the ordnance department, and first entered the army in 1861 as a sergeant of the Twelfth Pennsylvania, but gave up that position in 1862 to enter the military academy at West Point. He graduated from there in 1865, and was assigned to the Second Artillery, where he remained until 1867, when he was transferred to the ordnance department. He took Major Shaler to Washington with him, and he has been there since. Major Shaler was transferred to the ordnance department July 5, 1867, and became a first lieutenant June 1, 1868. He was promoted to captain in 1870, and to major in May, 1897. He has been married since he was assigned to Washington, while he has never been assigned to this post, yet he has visited here and has many friends in the city.

GEN. BUFFINGTON'S CHANGES.

Gossip as to Men with Whom He Has Had Clashes.

The changes now taking place in the ordnance department as the result of Gen. Buffington succeeding to the command have caused much comment in army circles.

The ex-officer says that now that he has the power several of those with whom Gen. Buffington may have had differences are drawing the line, and the undesirable ones he further said he had followed all changes and could trace several assignments to a personal cause.

The proposed change was the subject of conversation among a number of military officers of this city last night, and it was believed that it would be possible to make this arsenal one of the most important in the country. Major Varney is a well-known figure to bring it up than any commanding officer ever here and there is now a thoroughly equipped shop at the arsenal with all necessary tools, for the manufacture of haversacks, knapsacks and leather goods. This was secured at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and since that time the arsenal has been busy with the manufacture of these articles were made and shipped to the front from here. Major Varney's new command at San Antonio is not so large a post as this one, and there are no more of the same kind here. Here there are twenty-five men.

Major Shaler is ranked seventh of the majors of the ordnance department, and first entered the army in 1861 as a sergeant of the Twelfth Pennsylvania, but gave up that position in 1862 to enter the military academy at West Point. He graduated from there in 1865, and was assigned to the Second Artillery, where he remained until 1867, when he was transferred to the ordnance department. He took Major Shaler to Washington with him, and he has been there since. Major Shaler was transferred to the ordnance department July 5, 1867, and became a first lieutenant June 1, 1868. He was promoted to captain in 1870, and to major in May, 1897. He has been married since he was assigned to Washington, while he has never been assigned to this post, yet he has visited here and has many friends in the city.

GEN. BUFFINGTON'S CHANGES.

Gossip as to Men with Whom He Has Had Clashes.

The changes now taking place in the ordnance department as the result of Gen. Buffington succeeding to the command have caused much comment in army circles.

The ex-officer says that now that he has the power several of those with whom Gen. Buffington may have had differences are drawing the line, and the undesirable ones he further said he had followed all changes and could trace several assignments to a personal cause.

The proposed change was the subject of conversation among a number of military officers of this city last night, and it was believed that it would be possible to make this arsenal one of the most important in the country. Major Varney is a well-known figure to bring it up than any commanding officer ever here and there is now a thoroughly equipped shop at the arsenal with all necessary tools, for the manufacture of haversacks, knapsacks and leather goods. This was secured at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and since that time the arsenal has been busy with the manufacture of these articles were made and shipped to the front from here. Major Varney's new command at San Antonio is not so large a post as this one, and there are no more of the same kind here. Here there are twenty-five men.

Major Shaler is ranked seventh of the majors of the ordnance department, and first entered the army in 1861 as a sergeant of the Twelfth Pennsylvania, but gave up that position in 1862 to enter the military academy at West Point. He graduated from there in 1865, and was assigned to the Second Artillery, where he remained until 1867, when he was transferred to the ordnance department. He took Major Shaler to Washington with him, and he has been there since. Major Shaler was transferred to the ordnance department July 5, 1867, and became a first lieutenant June 1, 1868. He was promoted to captain in 1870, and to major in May, 1897. He has been married since he was assigned to Washington, while he has never been assigned to this post, yet he has visited here and has many friends in the city.

GEN. BUFFINGTON'S CHANGES.

Gossip as to Men with Whom He Has Had Clashes.

The changes now taking place in the ordnance department as the result of Gen. Buffington succeeding to the command have caused much comment in army circles.

The ex-officer says that now that he has the power several of those with whom Gen. Buffington may have had differences are drawing the line, and the undesirable ones he further said he had followed all changes and could trace several assignments to a personal cause.

The proposed change was the subject of conversation among a number of military officers of this city last night, and it was believed that it would be possible to make this arsenal one of the most important in the country. Major Varney is a well-known figure to bring it up than any commanding officer ever here and there is now a thoroughly equipped shop at the arsenal with all necessary tools, for the manufacture of haversacks, knapsacks and leather goods. This was secured at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and since that time the arsenal has been busy with the manufacture of these articles were made and shipped to the front from here. Major Varney's new command at San Antonio is not so large a post as this one, and there are no more of the same kind here. Here there are twenty-five men.

Major Shaler is ranked seventh of the majors of the ordnance department, and first entered the army in 1861 as a sergeant of the Twelfth Pennsylvania, but gave up that position in 1862 to enter the military academy at West Point. He graduated from there in 1865, and was assigned to the Second Artillery, where he remained until 1867, when he was transferred to the ordnance department. He took Major Shaler to Washington with him, and he has been there since. Major Shaler was transferred to the ordnance department July 5, 1867, and became a first lieutenant June 1, 1868. He was promoted to captain in 1870, and to major in May, 1897. He has been married since he was assigned to Washington, while he has never been assigned to this post, yet he has visited here and has many friends in the city.

GEN. BUFFINGTON'S CHANGES.

Gossip as to Men with Whom He Has Had Clashes.

The changes now taking place in the ordnance department as the result of Gen. Buffington succeeding to the command have caused much comment in army circles.

The ex-officer says that now that he has the power several of those with whom Gen. Buffington may have had differences are drawing the line, and the undesirable ones he further said he had followed all changes and could trace several assignments to a personal cause.

The proposed change was the subject of conversation among a number of military officers of this city last night, and it was believed that it would be possible to make this arsenal one of the most important in the country. Major Varney is a well-known figure to bring it up than any commanding officer ever here and there is now a thoroughly equipped shop at the arsenal with all necessary tools, for the manufacture of haversacks, knapsacks and leather goods. This was secured at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and since that time the arsenal has been busy with the manufacture of these articles were made and shipped to the front from here. Major Varney's new command at San Antonio is not so large a post as this one, and there are no more of the same kind here. Here there are twenty-five men.

Major Shaler is ranked seventh of the majors of the ordnance department, and first entered the army in 1861 as a sergeant of the Twelfth Pennsylvania, but gave up that position in 1862 to enter the military academy at West Point. He graduated from there in 1865, and was assigned to the Second Artillery, where he remained until 1867, when he was transferred to the ordnance department. He took Major Shaler to Washington with him, and he has been there since. Major Shaler was transferred to the ordnance department July 5, 1867, and became a first lieutenant June 1, 1868. He was promoted to captain in 1870, and to major in May, 1897. He has been married since he was assigned to Washington, while he has never been assigned to this post, yet he has visited here and has many friends in the city.

GEN. BUFFINGTON'S CHANGES.

Gossip as to Men with Whom He Has Had Clashes.

The changes now taking place in the ordnance department as the result of Gen. Buffington succeeding to the command have caused much comment in army circles.

The ex-officer says that now that he has the power several of those with whom Gen. Buffington may have had differences are drawing the line, and the undesirable ones he further said he had followed all changes and could trace several assignments to a personal cause.

The proposed change was the subject of conversation among a number of military officers of this city last night, and it was believed that it would be possible to make this arsenal one of the most important in the country. Major Varney is a well-known figure to bring it up than any commanding officer ever here and there is now a thoroughly equipped shop at the arsenal with all necessary tools, for the manufacture of haversacks, knapsacks and leather goods. This was secured at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and since that time the arsenal has been busy with the manufacture of these articles were made and shipped to the front from here. Major Varney's new command at San Antonio is not so large a post as this one, and there are no more of the same kind here. Here there are twenty-five men.

Major Shaler is ranked seventh of the majors of the ordnance department, and first entered the army in 1861 as a sergeant of the Twelfth Pennsylvania, but gave up that position in 1862 to enter the military academy at West Point. He graduated from there in 1865, and was assigned to the Second Artillery, where he remained until 1867, when he was transferred to the ordnance department. He took Major Shaler to Washington with him, and he has been there since. Major Shaler was transferred to the ordnance department July 5, 1867, and became a first lieutenant June 1, 1868. He was promoted to captain in 1870, and to major in May, 1897. He has been married since he was assigned to Washington, while he has never been assigned to this post, yet he has visited here and has many friends in the city.

GEN. BUFFINGTON'S CHANGES.

Gossip as to Men with Whom He Has Had Clashes.

The changes now taking place in the ordnance department as the result of Gen. Buffington succeeding to the command have caused much comment in army circles.

The ex-officer says that now that he has the power several of those with whom Gen. Buffington may have had differences are drawing the line, and the undesirable ones he further said he had followed all changes and could trace several assignments to a personal cause.

The proposed change was the subject of conversation among a number of military officers of this city last night, and it was believed that it would be possible to make this arsenal one of the most important in the country. Major Varney is a well-known figure to bring it up than any commanding officer ever here and there is now a thoroughly equipped shop at the arsenal with all necessary tools, for the manufacture of haversacks, knapsacks and leather goods. This was secured at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and since that time the arsenal has been busy with the manufacture of these articles were made and shipped to the front from here. Major Varney's new command at San Antonio is not so large a post as this one, and there are no more of the same kind here. Here there are twenty-five men.

Major Shaler is ranked seventh of the majors of the ordnance department, and first entered the army in 1861 as a sergeant of the Twelfth Pennsylvania, but gave up that position in 1862 to enter the military academy at West Point. He graduated from there in 1865, and was assigned to the Second Artillery, where he remained until 1867, when he was transferred to the ordnance department. He took Major Shaler to Washington with him, and he has been there since. Major Shaler was transferred to the ordnance department July 5, 1867, and became a first lieutenant June 1, 1868. He was promoted to captain in 1870, and to major in May, 1897. He has been married since he was assigned to Washington, while he has never been assigned to this post, yet he has visited here and has many friends in the city.

GEN. BUFFINGTON'S CHANGES.

Gossip as to Men with Whom He Has Had Clashes.

The changes now taking place in the ordnance department as the result of Gen. Buffington succeeding to the command have caused much comment in army circles.

The ex-officer says that now that he has the power several of those with whom Gen. Buffington may have had differences are drawing the line, and the undesirable ones he further said he had followed all changes and could trace several assignments to a personal cause.

The proposed change was the subject of conversation among a number of military officers of this city last night, and it was believed that it would be possible to make this arsenal one of the most important in the country. Major Varney is a well-known figure to bring it up than any commanding officer ever here and there is now a thoroughly equipped shop at the arsenal with all necessary tools, for the manufacture of haversacks, knapsacks and leather goods. This was secured at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and since that time the arsenal has been busy with the manufacture of these articles were made and shipped to the front from here. Major Varney's new command at San Antonio is not so large a post as this one, and there are no more of the same kind here. Here there are twenty-five men.

Major Shaler is ranked seventh of the majors of the ordnance department, and first entered the army in 1861 as a sergeant of the Twelfth Pennsylvania, but gave up that position in 1862 to enter the military academy at West Point. He graduated from there in 1865, and was assigned to the Second Artillery, where he remained until 1867, when he was transferred to the ordnance department. He took Major Shaler to Washington with him, and he has been there since. Major Shaler was transferred to the ordnance department July 5, 1867, and became a first lieutenant June 1, 1868. He was promoted to captain in 1870, and to major in May, 1897. He has been married since he was assigned to Washington, while he has never been assigned to this post, yet he has visited here and has many friends in the city.

GEN. BUFFINGTON'S CHANGES.

Gossip as to Men with Whom He Has Had Clashes.

The changes now taking place in the ordnance department as the result of Gen. Buffington succeeding to the command have caused much comment in army circles.

The ex-officer says that now that he has the power several of those with whom Gen. Buffington may have had differences are drawing the line, and the undesirable ones he further said he had followed all changes and could trace several assignments to a personal cause.

The proposed change was the subject of conversation among a number of military officers of this city last night, and it was believed that it would be possible to make this arsenal one of the most important in the country. Major Varney is a well-known figure to bring it up than any commanding officer ever here and there is now a thoroughly equipped shop at the arsenal with all necessary tools, for the manufacture of haversacks, knapsacks and leather goods. This was secured at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and since that time the arsenal has been busy with the manufacture of these articles were made and shipped to the front from here. Major Varney's new command at San Antonio is not so large a post as this one, and there are no more of the same kind here. Here there are twenty-five men.

Major Shaler is ranked seventh of the majors of the ordnance department, and first entered the army in 1861 as a sergeant of the Twelfth Pennsylvania, but gave up that position in 1862 to enter the military academy at West Point. He graduated from there in 1865, and was assigned to the Second Artillery, where he remained until 1867, when he was transferred to the ordnance department. He took Major Shaler to Washington with him, and he has been there since. Major Shaler was transferred to the ordnance department July 5, 1867, and became a first lieutenant June 1, 1868. He was promoted to captain in 1870, and to major in May, 1897. He has been married since he was assigned to Washington, while he has never been assigned to this post, yet he has visited here and has many friends in the city.

GEN. BUFFINGTON'S CHANGES.

Gossip as to Men with Whom He Has Had Clashes.

The changes now taking place in the ordnance department as the result of Gen. Buffington succeeding to the command have caused much comment in army circles.

The ex-officer says that now that he has the power several of those with whom Gen. Buffington may have had differences are drawing the line, and the undesirable ones he further said he had followed all changes and could trace several assignments to a personal cause.

The proposed change was the subject of conversation among a number of military officers of this city last night, and it was believed that it would be possible to make this arsenal one of the most important in the country. Major Varney is a well-known figure to bring it up than any commanding officer ever here and there is now a thoroughly equipped shop at the arsenal with all necessary tools, for the manufacture of haversacks, knapsacks and leather goods. This was secured at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and since that time the arsenal has been busy with the manufacture of these articles were made and shipped to the front from here. Major Varney's new command at San Antonio is not so large a post as this one, and there are no more of the same kind here. Here there are twenty-five men.

Major Shaler is ranked seventh of the majors of the ordnance department, and first entered the army in 1861 as a sergeant of the Twelfth Pennsylvania, but gave up that position in 1862 to enter the military academy at West Point. He graduated from there in 1865, and was assigned to the Second Artillery, where he remained until 1867, when he was transferred to the ordnance department. He took Major Shaler to Washington with him, and he has been there since. Major Shaler was transferred to the ordnance department July 5, 1867, and became a first lieutenant June 1, 1868. He was promoted to captain in 1870, and to major in May, 1897. He has been married since he was assigned to Washington, while he has never been assigned to this post, yet he has visited here and has many friends in the city.

GEN. BUFFINGTON'S CHANGES.

Gossip as to Men with Whom He Has Had Clashes.

The changes now taking place in the ordnance department as the result of Gen. Buffington succeeding to the command have caused much comment in army circles.

The ex-officer says that now that he has the power several of those with whom Gen. Buffington may have had differences are drawing the line, and the undesirable ones he further said he had followed all changes and could trace several assignments to a personal cause.

The proposed change was the subject of conversation among a number of military officers of this city last night, and it was believed that it would be possible to make this arsenal one of the most important in the country. Major Varney is a well-known figure to bring it up than any commanding officer ever here and there is now a thoroughly equipped shop at the arsenal with all necessary tools, for the manufacture of haversacks, knapsacks and leather goods. This was secured at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and since that time the arsenal has been busy with the manufacture of these articles were made and shipped to the front from here. Major Varney's new command at San Antonio is not so large a post as this one, and there are no more of the same kind here. Here there are twenty-five men.

Major Shaler is ranked seventh of the majors of the ordnance department, and first entered the army in 1861 as a sergeant of the Twelfth Pennsylvania, but gave up that position in 1862 to enter the military academy at West Point. He graduated from there in 1865, and was assigned to the Second Artillery, where he remained until 1867, when he was transferred to the ordnance department. He took Major Shaler to Washington with him, and he has been there since. Major Shaler was transferred to the ordnance department July 5, 1867, and became a first lieutenant June 1, 1868. He was promoted to captain in 1870, and to major in May, 1897. He has been married since he was assigned to Washington, while he has never been assigned to this post, yet he has visited here and has many friends in the city.

GEN. BUFFINGTON'S CHANGES.

Gossip as to Men with Whom He Has Had Clashes.

The changes now taking place in the ordnance department as the result of Gen. Buffington succeeding to the command have caused much comment in army circles.

The ex-officer says that now that he has the power several of those with whom Gen. Buffington may have had differences are drawing the line, and the undesirable ones he further said he had followed all changes and could trace several assignments to a personal cause.

The proposed change was the subject of conversation among a number of military officers of this city last night, and it was believed that it would be possible to make this arsenal one of the most important in the country. Major Varney is a well-known figure to bring it up than any commanding officer ever here and there is now a thoroughly equipped shop at the arsenal with all necessary tools, for the manufacture of haversacks, knapsacks and leather goods. This was secured at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and since that time the arsenal has been busy with the manufacture of these articles were made and shipped to the front from here. Major Varney's new command at San Antonio is not so large a post as this one, and there are no more of the same kind here. Here there are twenty-five men.

Major Shaler is ranked seventh of the majors of the ordnance department, and first entered the army in 1861 as a sergeant of the Twelfth Pennsylvania, but gave up that position in 1862 to enter the military academy at West Point. He graduated from there in 1865, and was assigned to the Second Artillery, where he remained until 1867, when he was transferred to the ordnance department. He took Major Shaler to Washington with him, and he has been there since. Major Shaler was transferred to the ordnance department July 5, 1867, and became a first lieutenant June 1, 1868. He was promoted to captain in 1870, and to major in May, 1897. He has been married since he was assigned to Washington, while he has never been assigned to this post, yet he has visited here and has many friends in the city.

GEN. BUFFINGTON'S CHANGES.

Gossip as to Men with Whom He Has Had Clashes.

The changes now taking place in the ordnance department as the result of Gen. Buffington succeeding to the command have caused much comment in army circles.

The ex-officer says that now that he has the power several of those with whom Gen. Buffington may have had differences are drawing the line, and the undesirable ones he further said he had followed all changes and could trace several assignments to a personal cause.

The proposed change was the subject of conversation among a number of military officers of this city last night, and it was believed that it would be possible to make this arsenal one of the most important in the country. Major Varney is a well-known figure to bring it up than any commanding officer ever here and there is now a thoroughly equipped shop at the arsenal with all necessary tools, for the manufacture of haversacks, knapsacks and leather goods. This was secured at the outbreak of the war with Spain, and since that time the arsenal has been busy with the manufacture of these articles were made and shipped to the front from here. Major Varney's new command at San Antonio is not so large a post as this one, and there are no more of the same kind here. Here there are twenty-five men.

Major Shaler is ranked seventh of the majors of the ordnance department, and first entered the army